Measuring what matters is the priority when developing performance measures and objectives. Departments start with building a foundation, which includes a well-defined mission statement and listing of services. The Operations Excellence Office (OEO) works with all departments and elected officials to ensure mission and services are defined and illustrate how the department or elected office supports the community.

After the foundation is in place, the OEO works with all departments and elected officials to develop performance measures and objectives as part of the two-year performance cycle. That framework of performance measures and objectives aligns to the services provided by the department.

OEO analyzes & reviews performance data on an on-going basis with departments and county leadership to assure the county is measuring what matters.
Three-Step Methodology

Build Foundation

- Mission statements answer, “Why do we exist?”
- Services address “What do we do?”
- These should be simply explained, begin with action words, and support the county’s mission and strategic plan goals
- This lays the foundation of developing performance measures and objectives

Develop Framework

- Use the Planning and Brainstorming Matrix to discuss priorities and develop measures
- Conduct industry research of peer performance measures
- Consider the three questions as part of Measuring What Matters
- Tell the story around the measure

Analyze & Review Performance

- Establish relationships and provide training to subject matter experts
- Track actuals against target
- Analyze trends
- Conduct performance meetings with departments and county leadership
Build Foundation

The mission and services are the foundation for building performance measures and objectives. Build Foundation starts with the question: Why do we exist? This question is answered by all departments in their mission statements. The mission statement for each department should describe its core purpose in relation to how the department serves the community to achieve the county’s mission and the strategic plan. Mission statements should be easy to understand, results oriented, and written from the customer perspective.

The next question is: What do we do? Department responses to this question are used to describe the services they provide. Departments build a comprehensive, yet succinct and understandable, listing of services that can be easily understood by the community in terms of the impact to them. Department services typically correspond to the groupings on their departmental organization chart. Grouping services into sections this way makes it more manageable to understand the major functions of each department. Services listings should start with action words to help describe what they do.

The mission and services are the foundation for building performance measures and objectives.

Analyze Performance

Illustration shows a breakdown of the Planning & Brainstorming Matrix
Once the foundation is built, departments develop the framework by determining key services to measure and plan their projects and initiatives. The Operations Excellence Office (OEO) developed a tool called the Planning and Brainstorming Matrix to facilitate the discussion of priorities and the development of performance measures and objectives for the two-year performance cycle. This tool ensures alignment of departmental services to performance measures and objectives.

OEO conducts industry research on peer city/county performance measures by organizing and compiling information for each department to consider. The industry research increases awareness of performance measures tracked by the county’s peers that perform like services.

Peer city/county industry research for HR
Brainstorming the three measuring what matters questions helps to prioritize key metrics for each department. To ensure we are measuring what matters, departments answer these three questions:

1. What does the community want to know about the department?
2. What would the department like the community to know?
3. What does the department want to learn about itself?

Once metrics are determined, the Operations Excellence Office (OEO) works with each department to tell the story about each measure by asking key questions such as, “Why is this important?”, “Where does the data come from?”, “How is the measure calculated?”, along with preparing dashboards to easily visualize the targets in comparison to actual results.
Analyzing and reviewing performance begins with the Operations Excellence Office (OEO) establishing relationships and providing training to subject matter experts. To help tell the story, OEO works with subject matter experts from all departments to ensure they have a strong understanding of the metric, why it is being tracked, how often data is collected, and how the data will be displayed.

Tracking actual results as compared to the targets is a key activity conducted during this phase. OEO analyzes data trends and asks subject matter experts questions to understand the results for the performance measures and objectives.

Conducting performance meetings with departments and county leadership is very important to ensure a shared understanding of the measures, ensure current and accurate information, and discuss action plans. OEO prepares performance meeting agendas, webpages for each measure, and dashboards while analyzing trends to uphold the pillars of transparency and accountability in the performance management process.
The strategic plan and performance management program is administered by the Operations Excellence Office (OEO) with input and support from county leadership. Departments play an integral role in the strategic plan by ensuring that the county is “measuring what matters” and continuing to strive to improve services to better meet the needs of the community.
